

Description: George Mason University offers a Master's of Science in Athletic Training (MSAT) for those interested in becoming a board certified athletic trainer. The MSAT is an inclusive program that promotes engagement and involvement for those seeking athletic training as their chosen profession. With over 100 clinical education sites and preceptors located in the Northern Virginia/DC Metro Region, the MSAT engages students in high school, college/university, public safety, performing arts and rehabilitation based clinical education settings. The program is housed on the Science and Technology campus in Manassas, Virginia and offers students access to 2 athletic training education laboratories as well as the SMART Laboratory for research. For more information, please contact Dr. Amanda Caswell, director of the MSAT.
